Where Employment Law and Workers' Compensation Intersect

While employers and HR Professionals are often intimately involved in employment law matters related to their workforce, the same is not always the case when dealing with workers' compensation issues. With many workers' compensation claims being processed, litigated, and paid for by insurance carriers, employers often feel disconnected from the process, and as a result, unable to adequately protect its own interests. This program will provide employers with a better understanding of workers' compensation law, as well as tips on how to stay involved and protect your own interests throughout the process.

LEARN:

- Basics of workers' compensation law
- How employers can help minimize exposure
- Balance minimizing workers' compensation exposure and employer's interests
- How to deal with problems employees with active workers' compensation claims
- Impact of COVID-19 on workers' compensation
