February 2, 2022 | 9:00am-11:00am
Webinar

In a world that's been significantly affected by COVID-19 from a physical, mental and emotional perspective, the reference of the Great Resignation is breaking all kinds of records. People across the U.S. have been quitting their jobs in record numbers with numbers peaking in April but remaining as many as 4 million people each month for several months.

If there's one thing the pandemic taught us, it's that people view—and value—their time much differently now than in the past. From large corporations to small mom-and-pop shops, businesses are struggling to find talent that is willing to work—and their operations, profitability and customers are often suffering in the process. Add to that the number of people deciding to simply walk away in order to gain greater clarity over their lives and purpose, and you have the makings for at least part of the formula for the Great Resignation. So how do we stop it—or at least influence it to minimize the affects in our workplaces?

This session will:

- Look at the root cause to better understand the statistics
- Discuss the critical policies and practices common among workplaces to determine if your company is at risk
- Learn valuable tips to stopping the drain of good talent
